New Writing is an annual anthology of new literature in English from Britain and the Commonwealth, subsidised and administered by the British Council and published by Picador in association with the Arts Council of England. It was founded in 1992 by the British Council's Literature Department in response to the strong interest in the newest, liveliest and most exciting of British writing in countries overseas where access to contemporary writing and to books is often difficult. It is primarily designed to act as an international shop-window for writers, but also to be a showcase of new work and fresh talent for British audiences. Some of the contents of the anthology are commissioned but submissions (short stories, poetry, essays, extracts from work in progress) are invited from authors or their agents for consideration. Priority will be given to writers of British or Commonwealth nationality and to work, which illuminates and illustrates British life and literature today. The work must be unpublished and the author should be willing to give the British Council electronic rights as well as world rights in all languages for eighteen months following publication (the copyright remains with the author). There is no limit on the length of pieces, but constraints of space mean that longer items will stand less chance of acceptance. This volume brings together some of Britain's most formidable literary talent, placing new names alongside more established ones, and offers contributions ranging from poetry to essays, and from short stories to previews of novels in progress.
